Market Summary

The news flow is cautious to risk-off, based on 391 articles from MarketBeat, MSN, Yahoo Finance, Reuters, The Motley Fool. The dominant theme is macro, with 228 macro items, 62 company items, 83 industry items, and 18 policy items. The tape looks more useful for identifying near-term rotation and risk appetite than for making a single directional index call.

Index Performance Summary

Nasdaq and growth indexes should be the most sensitive part of the tape when AI, semiconductor, mega-cap tech, or guidance stories dominate. S&P 500 direction is likely to remain tied to Treasury yields, Fed expectations, inflation data, and broad risk appetite. Dow and equal-weight exposure may react more to policy, regulation, tariff, and industrial-cycle headlines.

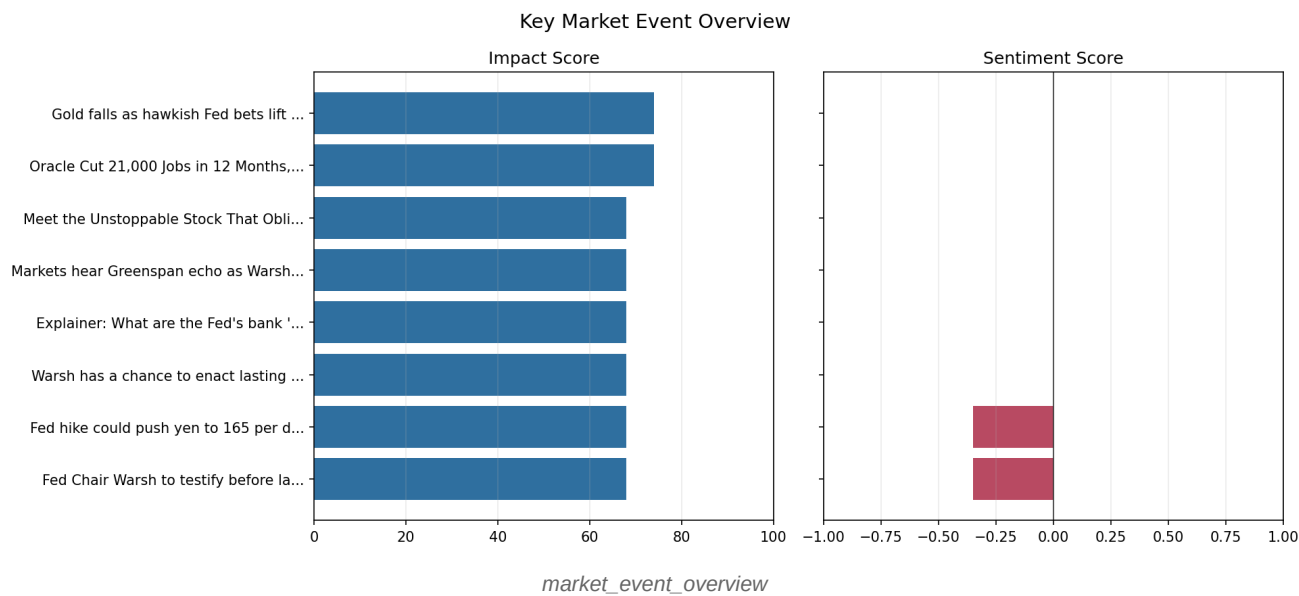

Macro Outlook

Macro coverage is concentrated around Fed/rates (107), growth/jobs (38), inflation (6), tariffs/policy (4). The practical implication is that equity rallies may need confirmation from rates and inflation expectations; if yields rise while growth headlines weaken, risk appetite can fade quickly.

Risk & Sentiment

Sentiment is cautious to risk-off: 34 positive, 80 negative, and 277 neutral articles. My read is to avoid treating headline volume as conviction by itself; the more important signal is whether macro-sensitive and technology-sensitive stories are pointing in the same direction.
